THREATENED SPECIES CONSERVATION ACT 1995

Final Determination

The Scientific Committee, established by the Threatened Species Conservation Act, has made a Final Determination to list a population of the Yellow-bellied Glider Petaurus australis Shaw, 1791 on the Bago Plateau as an ENDANGERED POPULATION in Part 2 of Schedule 1 of the Act. Listing of endangered populations is provided for by Part 2 of the Act.

This population of the Yellow-bellied Glider, Petaurus australis Shaw, 1791 on the Bago Plateau was originally listed in 2008 as an Endangered population in Part 2 of Schedule 1 of the Act (NSW Government Gazette No. 150 dated 21 November 2008). The Scientific Committee has reviewed more up-to-date information on this population and re-assessed the population against the criteria prescribed by the Threatened Species Conservation Regulation 2010.

The Scientific Committee has found that:

1. The Yellow-bellied Glider Petaurus australis Shaw, 1791 (family Petauridae) is not currently listed as an Endangered Species in Part 1 of Schedule 1, or a Critically Endangered Species in Part 1 of Schedule 1A of the Threatened Species Act 1995, and as a consequence populations of this species are eligible to be listed as Endangered populations.
1. The Yellow-bellied Glider Petaurus australis is a relatively large (450–700 g) arboreal marsupial distinguished by its gliding membrane which extends from wrists to ankles, whitish to yellow fur on the belly, long fluffy tail, black dorsal stripe, large bare ears and unusual loud vocalisations (Kavanagh and Rohan-Jones 1982; Russell 1995). The Bago Plateau contains a high proportion of the known distribution of the Yellow-bellied Glider on the south-western slopes of NSW (Kambouris et al. 2013). Most of the Bago Plateau is located above 1000 m a.s.l. (Kambouris et al. 2013). For the purposes of this determination, the population of Yellow-bellied Gliders on the Bago Plateau is defined as occurring above the 900 m a.s.l. elevation contour, extending south to the Upper Murray Power Line (between 35.93° S, 148.31° E and 35.92° S, 148.36° E). The powerline is considered to reduce glider movement sufficiently to represent a boundary to the nominated population (E.C. Morris in litt. Nov 2012). The cumulative effect of a series of barriers restricts movement of gliders into and out of the population. These barriers include cleared land and pine plantations to the north and west, in addition to the Blowering and Talbingo impoundments and a number of north/south running powerlines to the east.
2. Yellow-bellied Gliders feed on sap, nectar, manna, arthropods and insect exudates which they obtain during different seasons of the year from a diversity of Eucalyptus species (Kavanagh 1987; Goldingay and Jackson 2004), although only a small number of individual trees are selected as feed trees in any one area. The distinctive “v-shaped” incisions made on tree trunks by the gliders when feeding on sap provide a reliable record of the presence of the species (Goldingay and Kavanagh 1991), given that individual feed trees may be used over a period of 25 years (R. Kavanagh in litt. 2012).
3. Yellow-bellied Gliders are strictly arboreal, capable of gliding over 120 m between tall trees (Kavanagh and Rohan-Jones 1982), although glide distance is strongly influenced by the height from which gliders are able to launch themselves (Goldingay and Taylor 2009). During the day, Yellow-bellied Gliders shelter in tree hollows in large old trees which are usually more than 1 m in diameter at breast height (Craig 1985). Usually, fewer than five such den trees and fewer than 10 feed trees are utilised by an individual or family group (Goldingay and Kavanagh 1993). Yellow-bellied Gliders live in small family groups of 2–6, although 3–4 individuals are more common. Animals within a family group share resources available within an exclusive home-range of approximately 65 ha (range 25–85 ha) (Goldingay and Kavanagh 1990; Goldingay 1992; Goldingay and Kavanagh 1993; Goldingay and Jackson 2004). Population density is low, ranging between 0.03 and 0.14 animals per ha (Kavanagh 1984; Henry and Craig 1984; Craig 1985; Goldingay and Jackson 2004).
4. The Yellow-bellied Glider has a wide-ranging, though patchy, distribution along the escarpment and coastal plains of eastern and south-eastern mainland Australia, from north-eastern Queensland to western Victoria (NPWS 2003; Kavanagh 2004; Goldingay 2008). The species occupies mixed eucalypt forests but shows a preference for mature and old growth forests which provide the critical habitat elements of shelter and nesting hollows plus year-round food resources (Milledge et al. 1991; Kavanagh and Bamkin 1995; Kavanagh et al. 1995; Eyre and Smith 1997; Kavanagh and Webb 1998; Lindenmayer et al. 1999a). In New South Wales, the area occupied by the Yellow-bellied Glider is thought to have declined by 26–50 percent since European settlement (Lunney et al. 2000), largely due to habitat loss, fragmentation and other landscape-scale effects (e.g. fire). The species is known to be particularly susceptible to such effects across its distribution (Lindenmayer et al. 1999a; 1999b; 1999c; Youngentob et al. 2013).
5. The geographic distribution of the population of the Yellow-bellied Glider on the Bago Plateau is highly restricted. The estimated extent of occurrence (EOO) of the population is 959 km², based on a minimum convex polygon encompassing all occupied sites, as recommended by IUCN (2011). The area of occupancy (AOO) for the population is calculated to be 912 km², based on 2 x 2 km grid cells, the scale recommended for assessing area of occupancy by IUCN (2011).
6. The Bago Plateau population is one of the most western locations for the species in New South Wales and occupies a broad elevational gradient (up to 1300 m a.s.l.; Kambouris et al. 2013), including one of the highest elevations recorded for the species in New South Wales (Goldingay in litt. 2012). One predicted impact of climate change on arboreal mammals in Australia is that rising temperatures will result in elevated water requirements and in some cases water stress among populations, forcing range contraction into cooler, higher altitude habitats which represent climate refugia (Kearney et al. 2010; Krockenberger et al. 2012). The NSW Priorities for Biodiversity Adaptation to Climate Change (2010) identifies the importance of building resilience to give species the best chance to adapt to climate change.

Protecting climate refugia, increasing functional connectivity to allow species to move along altitudinal gradients and protecting areas of habitat to maintain population viability and genetic diversity are important components of building resilience (Department of Environment, Climate Change and Water NSW 2010). Thus the Bago Plateau population is considered to be of significant conservation value with respect to the future resilience and adaptability of the species.

7. The population occurs across a large portion of Bago and Maragle State Forests, a small area of Kosciuszko National Park and some freehold land. The area supports four main forest tree associations: montane gums, comprised mainly of Eucalyptus dabrympleana, E. viminalis and E. pauciflora but also including E. camphora and E. stellulata; montane gums mixed with the peppermints E. robertsonii and E. dives; montane gums mixed with E. delegatensis; and pure stands of E. delegatensis (Kambouris et al. 2013). A habitat model produced for the Southern Comprehensive Regional Assessment in 2000 estimated the Bago Plateau contained approximately 27,550 ha of high quality habitat and 20,270 ha of medium quality habitat for the Yellow-bellied Glider (NPWS 2000). This analysis included forests dominated by E. delegatensis. More recent work suggests Yellow-bellied Gliders on the Bago Plateau favour the three montane gum dominated forest types as they were not observed to use pure stands of E. delegatensis (Kambouris et al. 2013). Habitat modelling based on this information estimated a total of 35,886 ha of habitat was available, comprising 15,648 ha of modelled high quality habitat and 20,238 ha of moderate quality habitat.
8. Habitat modelling has formed the basis of population viability analysis for the Bago Plateau Yellow-bellied Glider population. Using data from largely undisturbed forests, Goldingay and Possingham (1995) estimated that a minimum of 150 glider groups were needed to achieve a probability of extinction less than 0.05 (i.e. the population has a 95% probability of persisting for 100 years). This analysis was sensitive to small changes in adult mortality and breeding success but did not explicitly account for additional threats, such as from timber harvesting operations. More recent work, adopting an occupancy-based habitat model, suggests that an estimated 35,886 ha of suitable habitat available on the Bago Plateau would support over 200 family groups of Yellow-bellied Gliders (Kambouris et al. 2013). The Yellow-bellied Glider population on the Bago Plateau is considered to be of significant conservation value given that Yellow-bellied Gliders appear to be declining in other parts of their range (Lindenmayer et al. 1999a; 1999b; 1999c; 2011; Youngentob et al. 2013; in litt. 2012) and the Bago Plateau population is capable of supporting a substantial number of family groups that have the potential to contribute to the species' viability in the long-term.
9. During 2010, the distribution, habitat preference and response to logging by Yellow-bellied Gliders on the Bago Plateau was investigated (Kambouris et al. 2013) with results compared to a baseline assessment made in 1995 (reported in Kavanagh and Stanton 1998). The 2010 survey results showed that Yellow-bellied Gliders occupy areas of suitable habitat adjacent to the Bago Plateau, particularly along the eastern escarpment, down to and across the Tumut River, and throughout areas of Kosciuszko National Park to the north, east and south of the Bago Plateau (Kambouris et al. 2013). These additional records suggest that Yellow-bellied Gliders on the Bago Plateau are potentially part of a regional metapopulation. The extent of animal movement, and therefore gene flow between Yellow-bellied Gliders on the Bago Plateau and those occurring to the east, north and south, is nevertheless likely to remain much less than historical levels of connectivity due to fragmentation. Partial fragmentation also occurs on the Bago Plateau from the numerous cleared powerline easements bisecting both the Bago Plateau and surrounding forests. The combination of easement width, the height of adjacent trees, spatial variability in tree height and the gliding ability of the Yellow-bellied Glider (based on glide ratio) is considered to result in major transmission lines acting as functional barriers to movement along substantial proportions of their length (E.C. Morris in litt. Nov 2012). However, Kambouris et al. 2013 suggests the easements are unlikely to be a significant barrier. As such, the extent to which the Bago Plateau population is interconnected with other populations remains equivocal, although some gene flow is considered likely.
10. Glider species are considered especially sensitive to fragmentation, as they rarely cross open ground and may be constrained in gliding by the maximum distance between successive trees (Jackson 2000). Studies on the specific effects of fragmentation on the Yellow-bellied Glider are lacking, however available information from related species suggests they are likely to be significantly impacted. For example, Van der Ree et al. (2010) compared movements of Squirrel Gliders (Petaurus norfolcensis) across road gaps of different widths and found that while two-thirds of the 47 individuals studied crossed small gaps (5 – 13 m), only one individual crossed a gap of 50 – 64 m width. Similarly, Van der Ree et al. (2003) followed the movement of Squirrel Gliders across gaps between remnant forest patches and found that 95% of patches visited by gliders were within 75 m of the remnant forest. Taylor et al. (2011) found evidence that such fragmentation may result in isolation in the genetic structure of Squirrel Gliders along the east coast of Australia, given that populations in comparable unfragmented landscapes showed evidence of continued gene flow. Similarly, Goldingay et al. (2013) showed for the same species that loss of habitat connectivity reduced genetic diversity in isolated populations over small spatial scales (1–50 km) and short time periods (20–50 years).
11. A comparison of the frequency of occurrence of Yellow-bellied Gliders on the Bago Plateau across sites sampled in 1995, 2010 and 2013 has provided equivocal results. Kambouris et al. (2013) report Yellow-bellied Glider occupancy of surveyed sites as 29.7% in 1995, 29.2% in 2010 and 35% in 2013. However survey effort and the distribution of sites across the four main forest types varied between the three survey times (Table 2, Kambouris et al. 2013, P. Kambouris, in litt. 2013) making data interpretation problematic. In 1995, Yellow-bellied Gliders were recorded at 26 sites but only at 14 of these same sites in 2010 (Kambouris et al. 2013). The sites where Yellow-bellied Gliders were recorded in 1995, but not in 2010 predominantly occurred in forest types where fewer sites were logged; montane gums and montane gums mixed with peppermints. However, in 2010, Yellow-bellied Gliders were also recorded at three sites where they had not been detected in 1995 (Kambouris et al. 2013). In the 2013 survey, Yellow-bellied Gliders were recorded in only three out of 10 sites where they were found in 1995 but occurred in 12 sites where they had not been recorded in 1995 (P. Kambouris, in litt. 2013).

12. The forests on the Bago Plateau have a long history of logging disturbance, dating back to at least 1917, with logging most intensive in stands dominated by Eucalyptus delegatensis. Evidence of the impact of logging operations on the Bago Plateau population of Yellow-bellied Gliders is equivocal. Analysis of the limited data reported in Kambouris et al. (2013) was unable to detect a significant impact of logging on site occupancy. However this analysis was limited by a low level of replication (with respect to survey site, forest type and logging history), differences in survey methods and the resulting low statistical power of comparisons. Numerous other studies have found that the Yellow-bellied Glider shows a strong preference for un-logged, old-growth forest or forest containing a high abundance of large, hollow-bearing trees in comparison to re-growth forest or forest subject to selective logging rotations (Milledge et al. 1991; Lindenmayer et al. 1999a; Incoll et al. 2001; Alexander et al. 2002; McAlpine and Eyre 2002). The occurrence of Yellow-bellied Gliders has also been found to decrease with increased logging intensity (e.g. Smith et al. 1994; Smith et al. 1995; Wormington et al. 2002; Eyre 2007).
13. The population of the Yellow-bellied Glider Petaurus australis Shaw, 1791 on the Bago Plateau is eligible to be listed as an Endangered population as, in the opinion of the Scientific Committee, it is facing a very high risk of extinction in New South Wales in the near future as determined in accordance with the following criteria as prescribed by the Threatened Species Conservation Regulation 2010:

Clause 11

The population is facing a very high risk of extinction in New South Wales in the near future as, in the opinion of the Scientific Committee, it satisfies the following paragraphs and also meets the criteria specified in one or more of the following clauses:

- (c) it is otherwise of significant conservation value.

Clause 13 Highly restricted geographic distribution of population and other conditions

The geographic distribution of the population is estimated or inferred to be highly restricted and:

- (a) a projected or continuing decline is observed, estimated or inferred in:
 (b) the geographic distribution, habitat quality or diversity, or genetic diversity of the population.

THREATENED SPECIES CONSERVATION ACT 1995

Final Determination

The Scientific Committee, established by the Threatened Species Conservation Act 1995 (the Act), has made a Final Determination under Section 23 of the Act to list the Shale Sandstone Transition Forest in the Sydney Basin Bioregion as a Critically Endangered Ecological Community in Part 2 of Schedule 1A of the Act and as a consequence, to omit reference to Shale/Sandstone Transition Forest from the list of Endangered Ecological Communities in Part 3 of Section 1 of the Act.

This determination contains the following information:

Parts 1 & 2: Section 4 of the Act defines an ecological community as “an assemblage of species occupying a particular area”. These features of Shale Sandstone Transition Forest in the Sydney Basin Bioregion are described in Parts 1 and 2 of this Determination, respectively.

Part 3: Part 3 of this Determination describes the eligibility for listing of this ecological community as Critically Endangered in Part 2 of Schedule 1A of the Act according to criteria as prescribed by the Threatened Species Conservation Regulation 2010.

Part 4: Part 4 of this Determination provides additional information intended to aid recognition of this community in the field.

- 1.2 The total species list of the community across all occurrences is likely to be considerably larger than that given above. Due to variation across the range of the community, not all of the above species are present at every site and many sites may also contain species not listed above.

Characteristic species may be abundant or rare and comprise only a subset of the complete list of species recorded in known examples of the community. Some characteristic species show a high fidelity (are relatively restricted) to the community, but may also occur in other communities, while others are more typically found in a range of communities.

The number and identity of species recorded at a site is a function of sampling scale and effort. In general, the number of species recorded is likely to increase with the size of the site and there is a greater possibility of recording species that are rare in the landscape.

Species presence and relative abundance (dominance) will vary from site to site as a function of environmental factors such as soil properties (chemical composition, texture, depth, drainage), topography, climate, and through time as a function of disturbance (eg fire, logging, grazing) and weather (eg flooding, drought, extreme heat or cold).

At any one time, above ground individuals of some species may be absent, but the species may be represented below ground in the soil seed bank or as dormant structures such as bulbs, corms, rhizomes, rootstocks or lignotubers.

The species listed above are vascular plants, however the community also includes micro-organisms, fungi, cryptogamic plants and vertebrate and invertebrate fauna. These components of the community are less well documented.

Part 2. Particular area occupied by the ecological community

- 2.1 The assemblage of species listed in Part 1.1 above which characterises the Shale Sandstone Transition Forest occurs within the Sydney Basin Bioregion. This Bioregion is defined by SEWPaC (2012) Interim Biogeographic Regionalisation for Australia, Version 7. Department of Sustainability, Environment, Water, Population and Communities. <http://www.environment.gov.au/parks/nrs/science/bioregion-framework/ibra/maps.html>
- 2.2 It is the intent of the Scientific Committee that all occurrences of the ecological community (both recorded and as yet unrecorded, and independent of their condition) that occur within this bioregion be covered by this Determination.

Part 3. Eligibility for listing

3.1 Reasons for determining eligibility for listing

- 3.1.1 Shale/Sandstone Transition Forest was listed as an Endangered Ecological Community under the Act in 1998 (NSW Scientific Committee 1998). Since this time new data and analyses have become available and the Committee is of the opinion that the determination of this community should be revised.
- 3.1.2 The estimated current distribution of the community primarily comprises the larger remnants depicted in the maps of Tozer et al. (2010). The mapped area of Shale Sandstone Transition Forest is 9600 ha, representing 20–40% of its original extent (Tozer et al. 2010). Thus the community has undergone a very large reduction in distribution since European settlement. Approximately 260 ha is currently represented in conservation reserves, representing <2% of its original extent.
- 3.1.3 Shale Sandstone Transition Forest occurs or has occurred primarily on relatively accessible terrain. A large proportion of the area where Shale Sandstone Transition Forest occurred has been cleared for agriculture and urban development. Shale Sandstone Transition Forest occurs in an area where a high proportion of remnants (90%) are mostly very small (<10 ha) and scattered and often adjoin cleared and/or degraded land (Tozer 2003). Shale Sandstone Transition Forest is among the most fragmented of vegetation types occurring in the Sydney region, with an estimated 1115 km of interface with cleared or degraded land (Tozer, pers. comm. 2013). Identified threats include: clearing associated with urban development, inappropriate fire regimes, anthropogenic climate change, removal of wood, physical damage from recreational activities, rubbish dumping, grazing, mowing and weed invasion. Current rates of clearing have not been estimated for Shale Sandstone Transition Forest, however rates of clearing of adjacent Cumberland Plain Woodland remnants (5.2±0.6% between 1998 and 2007), primarily for housing and road developments, are indicative (NSW Scientific Committee and Simpson 2008). Fragmentation and urban encroachment promote changes to fire regimes. As with the neighbouring Cumberland Plain Woodland, this is likely to lead to increased shrub cover and reduced understory diversity (by fire exclusion) or elimination of some non-sprouters (increased fire frequency) (Watson 2005). Invasion by Olea europea subsp. cuspidata (African Olive) and Asparagus asparagoides (Bridal Creeper) affects an estimated 20% and 25% of remnants, respectively (M. Tozer, unpublished data). These weeds have the potential to cause significant structural and compositional changes in Shale Sandstone Transition Forest, resulting in ecosystem collapse. Sites surveyed by Tozer (2003) contained an average of 4.6 (±3) exotic species. Over a quarter of sites contained Ligustrum sinense (Privet). Apart from African Olive and Bridal Creeper, the most prevalent exotic species were herbs, with over half of the survey sites significantly affected by at least four species, most commonly Paspalum dilatatum, Setaria gracilis, Cirsium vulgare, Plantago lanceolata, Bryophyllum delagoense, Hypochaeris radicata, Senecio madagascarensis and Axonopus affinis. 'Clearing of native vegetation', 'High frequency fire resulting in the disruption of life cycle processes in plants and animals and loss of vegetation structure and composition', 'Removal of dead wood and dead trees', 'Invasion of native plant communities by exotic perennial grasses', 'Loss and degradation of native plant and animal habitat by invasion of escaped garden plants, including aquatic plants' and 'Invasion and establishment of exotic vines and scramblers' are listed as Key Threatening Processes under the Act.

- 3.2 Shale Sandstone Transition Forest in the Sydney Basin Bioregion is eligible to be listed as a Critically Endangered Ecological Community in accordance with Section 12 of the Act as, in the opinion of the Scientific Committee, it is facing an extremely high risk of extinction in New South Wales in the immediate future, as determined in accordance with the following criteria as prescribed by the Threatened Species Conservation Regulation 2010:

Clause 17 Reduction in geographic distribution of the ecological community

The ecological community has undergone, is observed, estimated, inferred or reasonably suspected to have undergone or is likely to undergo within a time span appropriate to the life cycle and habitat characteristics of its component species:

- (a) a very large reduction in geographic distribution.

Clause 19 Reduction in ecological function of the ecological community

The ecological community has undergone, is observed, estimated, inferred or reasonably suspected to have undergone or is likely to undergo within a time span appropriate to the life cycle and habitat characteristics of its component species:

- (a) a very large reduction in ecological function,

as indicated by any of the following:

- (d) change in community structure,
 (e) change in species composition,
 (f) disruption of ecological processes,
 (g) invasion and establishment of exotic species,
 (h) degradation of habitat,
 (i) fragmentation of habitat.

Part 4. Additional information about the ecological community

- 4.1 The following information is additional to that required to meet the definition of an ecological community under the Act, but is provided to assist in the recognition of Shale Sandstone Transition Forest in the field. Given natural variability, along with disturbance history, Shale Sandstone Transition Forest in the Sydney Basin Bioregion may sometimes occur outside the typical range of variation in the features described below.
- 4.2 'Shale Sandstone Transition Forest' is listed under the Commonwealth Environmental Protection and Biodiversity Conservation Act 1999 as Shale/Sandstone Transition Forest. However, the Commonwealth listing advice excludes some patches, here regarded as Shale Sandstone Transitional Forest, on the basis of condition or structure thresholds.
- 4.3 Shale Sandstone Transition Forest corresponds to Cumberland Shale Sandstone Transition Forest (map unit p2) in Tozer et al. (2010), Shale Sandstone Transition Forest (Low sandstone influence) (map unit 1) and Shale Sandstone Transition Forest (High sandstone influence) (map unit 2) in Tozer (2003). Shale Sandstone Transition Forest in the Sydney Basin Bioregion also includes Cumberland Shale-Sandstone Ironbark Forest (map unit S_GW04) in DECCW (2009).
- 4.4 Shale Sandstone Transition Forest is recognised as a distinct assemblage with a variable species composition that occurs on soils overlying the transition between shale and sandstone lithologies. Variation in species composition depends on the composition of adjoining communities and the relative influence of the underlying sandstone and shale lithologies. Although Shale Sandstone Transition Forest is strongly ecotonal in its assemblage, it nevertheless contains species not recorded in adjoining communities, thus justifying its recognition as a distinct community (Tozer et al. 2010). Turpentine Ironbark Margin Forest (map unit 43 described in Tozer 2003) also occurs on soils transitional between shale and sandstone, however this community is floristically most similar to Turpentine Ironbark Forest (map unit 15 described in Tozer 2003) and together they comprise the endangered ecological community known as Sydney Turpentine Ironbark Forest (Tozer 2003).
- 4.5 The structure of Shale Sandstone Transition Forest varies from grassy woodland to forest. When the community occurs in areas of less sandstone influence it is dominated by Eucalyptus tereticornis, with E. eugenioides, E. crebra, E. fibrosa and E. punctata occurring less frequently. A small tree stratum may be present consisting of Eucalyptus spp., with Allocasuarina littoralis and Acacia decurrens sometimes present. A shrub layer dominated by Bursaria spinosa is usually present. The ground layer is diverse and is dominated by grasses and herbs including Microlaena stipoides var. stipoides, Cheilanthes sieberi subsp. sieberi, Dichondra repens, Themeda australis, Echinopogon ovatus, Entolasia marginata, Pratia purpurascens, Solanum prinophyllum and Oxalis perennans (Tozer 2003). When the community occurs in areas of greater sandstone influence it is dominated by Eucalyptus punctata and E. crebra, with E. fibrosa, Corymbia gummifera and Syncarpia glomulifera occurring less frequently. A small tree stratum may be present and is most often dominated by Allocasuarina littoralis, Syncarpia glomulifera, Persoonia linearis and Acacia decurrens. The shrub layer is well-developed and diverse, dominated by Kunzea ambigua, Persoonia linearis and Bursaria spinosa, while the ground layer is dominated by Austrostipa pubescens, Entolasia stricta, Themeda australis, Lepidosperma laterale, Aristida vagans and Pomax umbellata (Tozer 2003). On the margins of its distribution the community may contain, or be dominated by, tree species atypical of its broader distribution such as Angophora floribunda, Corymbia gummifera, C. maculata, E. pilularis, E. moluccana, E. tereticornis and Syncarpia glomulifera.

- 4.6 Shale Sandstone Transition Forest occurs up to 400 m above sea level in areas receiving less than 950 mm of annual rainfall. Its distribution is strongly correlated with soils derived from Wianamatta Shale, although it is restricted to areas where the shale stratum is thin, and the soil properties are influenced by underlying sandstone. These areas include: the extensive shale/sandstone boundary located around the margins of the Cumberland Plain and disjunct shale remnants located on ridges in the lower Blue Mountains and Woronora Plateau. Shale Sandstone Transition Forest may occur on sites where Triassic sandstone or interbedded shale-sandstone (Mittagong Formation) is outcropping provided the soil retains a shale influence, either from an eroded shale cap or where there is colluvial deposition from shale upslope. In general, examples of Shale Sandstone Transition Forest on soils derived from Hawkesbury Sandstone or Mittagong Formation are rare. Soils derived from the Mittagong Formation typically support a different community (Sydney Hinterland Transition Woodland, DSFp146, of Tozer et al. 2010) which is not listed as endangered. Shale Sandstone Transition Forest grades gradually to either Shale Plains Woodland or Shale Hills Woodland away from the margins of the Cumberland Plain, although narrow bands of the community may form deeper incursions into the plain along deeply eroded drainage lines. Beyond the margins of the plain the community grades more abruptly to Sydney Hinterland Transition Forest, Sandstone Gully Forest (DSF142 of Tozer et al. 2010) or Sandstone Ridgetop Woodland (DSFp131).
- 4.7 The Shale Sandstone Transition Forest has been recorded from the local government areas of Bankstown, Blue Mountains, Campbelltown, Hawkesbury, Hornsby, Liverpool, Parramatta, Penrith, The Hills Shire, Wingecarribee and Wollondilly (within the Sydney Basin Bioregion) and may occur elsewhere in the Bioregion.
- 4.8 Small areas of Shale Sandstone Transition Forest are presently included in Bargo State Conservation Area, Blue Mountains National Park, Cattai National Park, Georges River National Park, Nattai National Park, Parramatta Regional Park, Scheyville National Park, Gulguer Nature Reserve and Upper Nepean State Conservation Area.
- 4.9 The Shale Sandstone Transition Forest contains a number of threatened plant and animal species, listed in the table below.

Plants

Pimelea curviflora var. curviflora Vulnerable

Birds

Brown Treecreeper (Climacteris picumnus victoriae) Vulnerable

Black-chinned Honeyeater (Melithreptus gularis gularis) Vulnerable

Turquoise Parrot (Neophema pulchella) Vulnerable

Mammals

Koala (Phascolarctos cinereus) Vulnerable

Eastern Freetail Bat (Mormopterus norfolkensis) Vulnerable

Greater Broad-nosed Bat (Scoteanax ruepellii) Vulnerable

- 4.10 It is likely that some of the canopy components of Shale Sandstone Transition Forest provide a significant food source because they are winter-flowering, which is important for nectivorous migratory birds such as the Critically Endangered Regent Honeyeater (Anthochaera phrygia) and Endangered Swift Parrot (Lathamus discolor). Such trees may also provide significant food resources for the endangered Grey-headed Flying Fox (Pteropus poliocephalus) (S. Douglas, in litt. 2010).

The Environment Protection Authority (EPA) declares the following land to be significantly contaminated land under the Contaminated Land Management Act 1997 ("the Act"):

1. Land to which this declaration applies ("the site")

This declaration applies to 33–37 Carrington Road, Randwick (described as Lot A and B in DP 436478 and Lot 6 in DP 1083508) in the local government area of Randwick City Council. A map of the site is available for inspection at the offices of the Environment Protection Authority, 59 Goulburn Street, Sydney, NSW.

2. Nature of contamination affecting the site:

The EPA has found that the site is contaminated with the following substances ("the contaminants"):

- Total Petroleum Hydrocarbons (TPH).
- Naphthalene.
- Benzene, Toluene, Ethyl benzene and Xylenes (BTEX).

In particular the EPA has found:

- Elevated concentrations of TPH, BTEX and naphthalene compounds in groundwater on-site.
- Contaminated groundwater has migrated off site.

3. Nature of harm that the contaminant has caused:

The EPA has considered the matters in section 12 of the Act and for the following reasons has determined that the land is contaminated and that the contamination is significant enough to warrant regulation under the Act:

- Groundwater at the site is contaminated with concentrations of TPH, BTEX and naphthalene exceeding the relevant human health based guidelines.
- Phase Separate Hydrocarbon contamination has migrated offsite.
- Contaminated groundwater has the potential to seep into the sub floor car park of a residential property next to the site.
- Contaminated groundwater has migrated from the site to areas where it could pose a vapour risk to residential properties and/or offsite workers accessing underground utilities and excavations.

4. Further action under the Act

The making of this declaration does not prevent the carrying out of voluntary management of the site and any person may submit a voluntary management proposal for the site to the EPA.

5. Submissions invited

The public may make written submissions to the EPA on:

- Whether the EPA should issue a management order in relation to the site; or
- Any other matter concerning the site.

Submissions should be made in writing to:

Sydney South NSW 1232

or faxed to 02 9995 6603

by not later than 18 December 2014

Date: 20 November 2014

NIALL JOHNSTON
Manager Contaminated Sites
Environment Protection Authority

NOTE:

Management order may follow

If management of the site or part of the site is required, the EPA may issue a management order under section 14 of the Act.

Amendment/Repeal

This declaration may be amended or repealed. It remains in force until it is otherwise amended or repealed. The subsequent declaration must state the reasons for the amendment or repeal (section 44 of the Act).

Information recorded by the EPA

Section 58 of the Act requires the EPA to maintain a public record. A copy of this significantly contaminated land declaration will be included in the public record.

Information recorded by councils

Section 59 of the Act requires the EPA to give a copy of this declaration to the relevant local council. The council is then required to note on its planning certificate issued pursuant to section 149 (2) of the Environmental Planning and Assessment Act 1979 that the land is declared significantly contaminated land. The EPA is required to notify council as soon as practicable when the declaration is no longer in force and the notation on the section 149 (2) certificate is no longer required.

Relationship to other regulatory instrument

This declaration does not affect the provisions of any relevant environmental planning instruments which apply to the land or provisions of any other environmental protection legislation administered by the EPA.
